UPDATE: SEARS has added a Mail-in-The-Discount for another $50 off - see below. Just called Sears (Toronto) to see if they were going to give up water softeners this year, as they did last year (see thread - dropped to $1,150). They have sales starting Saturday that drops the Kenmore UltraSoft 800 water softener to $999. Others will be on sale too. «IMG» ... nerMIB.jpg/IMG' January 17th, 2008 12:50 pm Fire Deal Addict Dec 1, 2002 2204 posts 483 upvotes Burlington January 17, 2008 12:50pm Any filter or other things should be replaced every couple of months? How hard is it to install it? Just add the salt bags a couple of times a year. Do it yourself. And if you're less inclined, Sears charges about $170 to install replacements and $60 to drag the old one away. Metal guy might take the softener unit proper away for free and you can reuse the plastic salt tank. I just had one installed in my house like 2 weeks ago. I bought it from H.D. and then someone set it up. I also had to buy copper pipes so that a person could make connections... I don't want my outdoor water lines to be connected because that would be a waste. January 17, 2008 1:31pm Andlai Junior member September 7, 2003 104 posts 3 upvotes January 17, 2008 1:31pm I bought the exact model that was special last time. One quick point, $999 does not include installation fees. The installation fee is $251 plus GST. These fees include 5 feet of pipes. Anything longer than it will be $5/ft. I've been using it for 3 months, everything has been working well so far. Either way, installed it myself, but I spent like $150 on misc plumbing items to plumb it, a copper pipe adapter (my house pex), and pex pipes, Ts elbows and other items to run it the way I wanted. It was an interesting project, although I didn't use it enough to see how it works. My floors are made. No, you still need a reverse osmosis or a water filter that took out the impurities. It takes care of solid water caused by lime in groundwater. You use much less soap and shampoo. Best of all, you don't require a CLR lime stain and clog removal for your faucets, showers and drains! You don't want to drink softened water that hasn't gone through the reverse osmosis filter to remove salt. Err... I suppose if you are on a sodium-reducing diet... Though, if your water is rock hard you'd better worry about sodium in canned soup. In addition, you can always use potassium chloride instead of sodium chloride. The water softener removes calcium by ion exchange with sodium (or potassium). Calcium is out, sodium/potassium in. Other methods are needed to remove iron, chlorine, etc etc etc. etc. soft water foam soap is much better than hard, so you tend to use fewer detergents. Groundwater sources are usually harsh (high calcium content), while rainwater and surface water are usually mild. FWIW y was lucky with Sears water softeners, although the resin cylinder inside the salt storage bin can be problematic with overcoming salt due to condensation of resin resin Use good quality salts and put a particulate filter upstream from the softeners and you will greatly extend its lifespan. ? 2 Responses from these members: I know it can be very frustrating to have problems with a water softener. When this happens, it's because of the dirty venturi nozzle. Once it has been cleaned, it can take several cycles for the level to come back down. If it is full of water and salt in a solid tank, you can vacuum water and salt with a wet/dry vacuum. Once you have cleaned it, run the softener through several manual cycles to make sure it doesn't fill back with water. If it only has a few inches of water at the bottom, that's fine. If it works, you can add salt. If the level doesn't come down you will need to double check the venturi nozzle first. If that doesn't help, you can visit our Kenmore Water website. Just click on this link to view the troubleshooting animation: Kenmore Waters. If that doesn't help, I would recommend that you schedule a service. Just click on this link to do this: Sears Home Services. I hope it helps. If you need more help, please respond to this thread with a full model number. Thank you for using Manage My Life.
